Ah! there, little volcano down the Union.

The new friendliness of the South to Roosevelt has been tried in the very first instance. If the South can stand the President's plain utterances on the negro question at Tuskegee yesterday, it can be depended upon to have established a pretty firm friendship. While not asking the whites in the South to work with the blacks, President Roosevelt did ask them to work for the blacks, contending that it was not only in the line of their duty but for their interests as well, because of the shortage of labor in the South. Then another point on which the Southerners are likely to clash swords with their distinguished guest was in relation to lawlessness, in other words, lynching. Without doubt the President pointed out the proper course, but whether or not his words will appeal to the South is a question that the next few days will bring forth. It seems certain, however, that the friendliness will be greatly shaken, for the belief will probably gain foothold, that the President went into the South with an axe to grind, that he took the opportunity to read them certain lecture. But it is to be hoped that the address at Tuskegee will be taken in the spirit with which it was given, that of the most sincere good.

USE OF LIQUOR IN ELECTIONS.

When candidates for office, or hirings of candidates, stoop to the use of liquor to draw votes at the polls it is an indication that the candidates do not possess qualifications fit for the place they seek. In the first place it is a tacit confession of weakness on the part of the candidates themselves that they have not the personal characteristics strong enough to attract the voters. So they have recourse to the distribution of liquors, as favors, to various shifty and unwieldy possessors of the right to vote. And not only do the candidates thus admit their personal unfitness to hold office by their inability to attract votes by their own merits, but they show that they might be dangerous men when once in office. The man who permits the corruption of voters in order to get elected might also be guilty of further wrongs if he should be placed in positions of trust and responsibility. He is not a safe man to elect. And he should not be permitted to pose as a servant of the people, for in so doing the people give countenance to practices which are against the spirit of American institutions. There are all too many instances of the employment of corrupt influences in elections in this country of ours, and there are, we are sorry to admit, some occasions in Vermont.
